For trans and gender non-conforming people, using public restrooms can be a source of stress and anxiety because of very real psychological and physical safety concerns. People whose appearance does not conform to what is commonly expected for men or women experience stares, questions, comments, verbal harassment and physical violence when they try to use them. Trans* and gender non-conforming people sometimes avoid using public restrooms altogether, which can lead to health complications, such as dehydration, urinary tract infections, kidney infections and other kidney problems. The Chicago Restroom Access Project is a group of concerned Chicagoans working with Pride Action Tank to work for new policy and advocacy solutions for bathroom access for all. Pride Action Tank is a project of AIDS Foundation of Chicago. Questions? Email prideactiontank@aidschicago.org.*
